

Code of Conduct

1 Introduction

The SAIMC has found it necessary to implement a Code of Conduct in line with that of the Engineering Council of South Africa in order to provide rules of behavior that is acceptable for the SAIMC, its members and is fitting to the status of the automation, instrumentation and control industry.

The SAIMC recognizes that the activities of the Society is for the net benefit of the South African community over and above the interests of any individual, SAIMC member or company.

By paying the membership fees members commit to adhere to the Code of Conduct and other regulations of the SAIMC.

2 Purpose

The purpose of this Code of Conduct is to ensure that guidelines are available to our members regarding the conduct that is acceptable to the SAIMC. Due to the nature of our business people from competing suppliers and users come together at Technical evenings and other functions and it is important that guidelines are put in place to prevent non – compliant behavior in any form taking place.

The SAIMC's main goals are lobbying within the industry, development of technical standards, research and the development of the people within our industry making our members and their employers successful in business.

Often companies request confirmation that a person is a member of the SAIMC. When this happens, it is important that the company understands what can be expected from such a member. The SAIMC will not tolerate members pretending to have the skills, knowledge and expertise they do not actually have. Although it is difficult for the SAIMC to police this, companies can rest assured in the fact that if this type of misbehavior comes to our attention, the SAIMC will take the necessary actions to deal with the matter.
